Agenda Item 1: Ms. Susan VanSchuyver presented the assessment process in the arts and humanities area.

- Does assessment influence allocation of resources? The process helps make budget requests.
- What are the challenges in program assessment process? The change of forms and terminology. Some programs have a very small number of majors. This is further complicated by the fact that some programs have a large number of general education students in courses like the humanities degree. Most programs don’t have capstones; many rely on essays, surveys, projects, portfolios, interviews and tests as measurement tools. Film and Video has a capstone course and as a result of the capstone projects the curriculum was redesigned to include a greater emphasis on scriptwriting.
- How is the process being improved? What should happen with the assessment information? Department directors are working directly with program faculty. Faculty are looking at the results and use whatever feedback they receive. Challenges: Programs comprised of general education courses with majors who switch suddenly to accelerate graduation create a unique problem. As the general education assessment process continues to mature, data from this process will be useful for assessing programs primarily comprised of general education courses.

Agenda Item 2: Mr. Greg Gardner presented the program review process
• The timeline for the process is on the OCCC webpage.
• Program Review Faculty met during Planning and Prep week.
• AOAC will probably receive the 5-year program reviews in January to start its review and feedback process.
